The Search for True Self

Many Poets are not poets for the same reason that many religious men are not saints: they never succeed in being themselves they never get round to being the particular poet or the particular monk that they are intended to be by God.

People fail to be themselves because it is easier to be somebody else and because they can copy somebody else's success rather than risk their own failure. Working hard to copy somebody else is in the end not selfless; it is, in fact, selfish. 'There can be an intense egoism in following everybody else. People are in a hurry to magnify themselves by imitating what is popular – and too lazy to think of anything better.'

*'In order to become myself
 I must cease to be what I always thought I wanted to be.'
 ~ Thomas Merton*
